

Time is money

The clock is ticking on your tax dollars.

According to government estimates, America will face a shortage of over one million trained construction workers by the year 2010. That's bad news for taxpayers who live in communities without a comprehensive Responsible Bidder ordinance, because the billions of dollars of future local public works projects could have legions of untrained, unsafe workers on their jobsites.

Shoddy workmanship and accidents could cost millions in re-do's and lawsuits, and local taxing bodies will cover that cost by turning to you, the taxpayer.

But if we act now, we won't have to react later. Talk to your local elected officials about passing a comprehensive Responsible Bidder ordinance. Learn more by clicking on our website at www.iiifc.org. We're the Indiana, Illinois and Iowa Foundation for Fair Contracting.
